HEAD AND AORTIC ARTERIES

Blood from the heart exits the brachiocephalic artery and splits into two main pathways to the right side of the head. One of these is the right common carotid artery, which enters the brachiocephalic artery and then splits into the external carotid artery and the internal carotid artery. The external carotid artery has several branches, among them the facial artery, the superficial temporal artery, the maxillary artery, and the occipital artery. The common carotid artery takes blood through the carotid canal of the skull and into the brain. The other main pathway of blood to the right side of the head is the vertebral artery, which enters through the vertebral foramen. The left side of the head has similar pathways except that the left common carotid artery and the left vertebral artery arise from the aortic arch and not from the brachiocephalic artery. Label these vessels and color them in red.
